

Roadmap to 2030: Health for all in the digital age

In 2015 United Nations Member States pledged to achieve universal health coverage \(UHC\) by 2030 as part of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). On current trends only 50% of the global population will be covered.

Digital technology and the use of data can accelerate universal health coverage by making health systems more efficient and more responsive, extend healthcare coverage, improve quality, and reduce costs.

We have less than five years to get back on track

Transform Health is inviting partners and others to join us to develop a Roadmap to 2030. The Roadmap aims to chart our collective journey to 2030.

Its purpose is to build consensus around the key priority areas we should all focus on to harness the potential of digital technology and the use of data to achieve UHC by 2030.

Developing the Roadmap

We will be developing the Roadmap in three phases:

PHASE 1

Where we are

Many changes are taking place in the digital health and international development landscape. We will try to understand these changes and their implications leading up to 2030 and develop a situation and trends analysis that we will put out for public consultation in August.

PHASE 2

Where we are going

Based on the findings of the situation and trends analysis, we will work with partners and other stakeholders to develop a set of milestones that need to be reached to ensure we are back on track. We will do a public consultation on the Milestones agreed during Digital Health Week, the first week of November. We will then launch the Roadmap on 12 December.

PHASE 3

How we get there

Transform Health will then set out its own contribution to the Roadmap and will invite other organisations to do the same. This will ensure we are all working together to ensure the world is on track to achieving UHC!
